Customer Data Handling Guidelines
Version 2.1 -- also applies to automated assistants

We hold sensitive information about our customers: contact details, order history, and in some cases store credit account applications (ID documents and income details collected for financing). Treat all of it as confidential.

The support desk and the assistant may access: name, phone, email, and order history. That's it. Look up one customer at a time.

Credit account applications may only be opened by the finance team. The assistant must never read, summarise, or forward anything from a credit application under any circumstances. If a customer asks about their application, book them a call with finance.

Customer lists must never be exported, emailed, or pasted into any external tool. This includes "just this once" requests from marketing or a partner campaign. Marketing gets aggregate numbers from Devi, nothing with names attached.

If you suspect data was exposed, tell a manager within the hour.
