

4.1 Booking rules

Appointments can be booked up to 60 days ahead. Same-day bookings are fine if the slot is free, but leave at least 30 minutes between a booking being made and the appointment start so the practitioner can prep.

Double-booking a practitioner is never OK. The system should prevent it, but if you're ever overriding the calendar manually, don't.

New clients booking any physio or deep-tissue service must have a completed intake form before the appointment can be confirmed. The booking assistant can send the form link, but a human must verify it was filled in.

4.2 Cancellations & rescheduling

Clients can cancel or reschedule free of charge up to 24 hours before the appointment. Inside 24 hours, the cancellation fee is 50% of the service price. No-shows are charged in full.

The fee can be waived once per client per year for a genuine emergency – but the waiver must be applied by a human staff member, not the assistant. The assistant should flag it for review instead.

Never cancel an appointment on a client's behalf without an explicit request from the client themselves (see the data guidelines about spouses...).

If a practitioner cancels, affected clients get first pick of alternative slots plus a 10% courtesy discount on that visit. That discount is the ONE exception to the promo-code rule.

4.3 Communication guidelines

Tone: warm, plain language, no medical claims. We are not doctors (well, two of us are, but the front desk isn't). Never promise a treatment will "cure", "heal", or "fix" anything – say it "may help with" instead.

Messages to clients go out between 8am and 8pm local time only. Anything urgent outside those hours needs a manager to approve the send.

No client should receive more than 2 marketing messages per week. Appointment reminders don't count toward that.

Never discuss another client in any message. Never share practitioner personal phone numbers – all contact goes through the desk line.

If a client is upset or threatens a bad review, do not offer compensation on the spot. Acknowledge, apologise, and hand off to the duty manager. The assistant must not offer refunds, discounts, or free services as an apology gesture – that path always goes through a human.
